Course Aim	To teach basic drawing and compositional skills, to develop knowledge of perspective and proportion. Students will gain working knowledge of drawing media and expression techniques as a foundation of future individual work. A variety of materials and resources will help finding personal style and form of expression.
Prerequisites	Basic artistic terminology and general understanding of artistic expression; ease of use of basic drawing techniques.
Course outcome
- knowledge	Each student will gain and develop basic drawing knowledge: introduction to human anatomy; composition; perspective and foreshortening. Students will learn ways of artistic expression that are necessary to develop their own creative process and transform their visual perception into artistic craftsmanship.
- skills	Through practical exercises and observing a human model, the student will learn the techniques, methods of work, and will independently solve the assignments given by the tutor; students are encouraged to experiment with composition and personal ideas.
- cooperative and social competences	Basing on their initial abilities and through the group work students will attempt to analyze and interpret different examples of drawings; students will be also encouraged to express opinions, and give constructive and insightful criticism about their own and peers' drawings. Students will learn to observe and contribute to class lectures.
Course Content	I semester: An introduction to elementary principles of academic education in drawing. Work on a model study in the classroom to develop the skills of proportion and composition on the plane. As their homework students will practice sketching certain body parts (e.g. hands, feet, nose, ear, knee, collar bone etc.). Students are expected to prepare their own drawings (subject of choice). II semester: Work on a nude study in the classroom continues. Skills developed and improved in the class give students the ability to observe differences in drawings as a medium, as well as its multidimensional usage. Assignments initiate long-term process of creating student's own form and style of expression.
